An Unequaled Variety of ORIENTAL RUGS At Very Attractive Prices

Foresighted preparedness upon our part has, to a great extent, offset the fact that the rug looms of the Near East have been reduced to a state of idleness by the activities of the armies fighting on the Tigris, in the Caucasus and over a large part of Asiatic Turkey.

For we now offer Oriental Rugs, woven in times of peace, at much less than the wartime prices which they will command when our present stock is exhausted.

We guarantee the quality as well as the genuineness of every Rug in our extensive collection.

Goods purchased now will be stored until next Fall without charge.

QUESTION THAT WORRIES THE AVERAGE CITIZEN

Unable to Decide Whether European War or Sun Spots Cause Bad Weather.

Department Experts and Other Scientists Discuss the Issue-Ordinary Man Investigates.

That is the question puzzling citizens and scientists alike. The recent series everybody to thinking seriously, and amid the soaking rains that have recently and frequently dampened the streets and the spirits of those who trod them, the question became acute. What's wrong with our weather?

What good is it, for instance, that the weather bureau promises "partly overcast for today and tomorrow" if the what he did say: city is to be plunged into imitation winter, or treated to a few days of spring several months late, or suddenly slammed right into the middle of summer without one single, solitary hour of Investigates and Sums Up.

To solve this perplexing weather mysery a citizen started out this morning on a tour of investigation, and his results about as follows:

Our bad weather is caused by "low say scientists at the Opinion seems divided at the Naval Observatory. Some there say the unseasonable weather may be due to the war in Europe. Those who hold this view are very careful to accent strongly the word "may." Others, including Supt. J. A. Hoogewerff, say it is "possible" that the sun, through its "spots," may take a hand in the weather. Nobody is willing to swear to the statement. The European war is a long way from here, and the sun is a tremendous long way from here, so the question of the relation of the sun and the earth when it comes to the earth's weather is more or less a matter of conjecture. Spots "Come and Go."

"Sun spots come and go," declared "These spots have periods of maximum and minimum development, eleven years. This year is a maximum period. We have observed that the more spots there are on the sun the more apt the weather is to be unsea-sonable, but we have no particular rea-son or any absolute data for holding this opinion."

this is a theory which meets the approval of the average observing man, as it seems true that since the outbreak of the war the United States has experienced more "funny" weather than in all its past history. This theory dovetails in with reasons advanced by experts at the weather bureau, although these latter authorities never for an instance hinted that there was any connection. What they said was this: That a series of "low barometers" have been sweeping the country recently, and that these waves were caused by unequal heating of some part of the earth's surface.

May it not be—with a tremendous accent on the "may," this time—may it not be possible that Europe is the portion of the earth's surface that is getting all "het up?"

"The war has nothing to do with it," succinctly states Dr. Frankenfield of the weather bureau.

Well, take your choice, then. One citizen at least has given it up in despair. Sun spots, low barometers, war in Europe—whatever causes or does not cause the weather, one thing is The superintendent then went into an explanation of what "sun spots" are, and while his explanation was clear enough, the investigating citizen emerged with the idea that sun spots are caused on that great orb by storms in that locality similar to our own storms, and that the spots are great clouds of gases generated in that far, far clime, into which intrepid astronomists look from a distance of millions and millions of miles, much in the same fashion that one would look into some great hole. "Sun spots" are pretty big morsels for the uninitiate to contemplate, just as they are for scientists to investigate.

Tremendously Big Spot Taday.

Tremendously Big Spot Today. There is a tremehdously big spot on the sun today, Capt. Hoogewerff says. He did not say that today's weather is traceable to that sun spot. But here is "The sun is the source of all our life and energy. The sun runs the earth, scientifically, so it is not unreasonable to think that it would take a hand in the weather here." Because the maximum periods of sur

Bocause the maximum periods of sun spots is so far apart—eleven years—the relation of these spots to the earth's weather is difficult to establish, declared Rev. Louis Rodes, assistant in the ebro-laboratory at Torton, Spain, who is on a three-year leave of absence, studying meteorological subjects in this country, and is now located at the observatory of the Georgetown University. At the observatory in Spain a ten-year study of sun spots was consummated in order to establish the connections of the spots with the earth along all possible lines. According to Father Rodes, it was found that in many cases the effect of sun spots was without doubt certain, chiefly as regards magnetism and electrical currents.

"As recorde weather connections" he rents.

"As regards weather connections," he said this morning, "that is more difficult to establish, because the period of the sun spots is so far apart. It is my opinion that the connection is very slim."

Here's the War Theory. Great quantities of gases given of
